1. Your ancestors must anchor your life (Ancestral Anchor).
2. Psychology is the superpower.
Psyche is a technology not woo. It's software and as such is composable, stackable & programmable.
3. Family first and forever. All mutineers or interlopers death with swiftly, harshly, and decisively.
4. Business is the Battlefield and there's No Geneva Convention.

It's good hook, Programmable Psyche, my competitor wrote here. Values, virtue, rules, whatever. I like the term first principle. 117 billion ancestors smiling upon you from haven, when you are fed up with the current state of affairs. Psychology, you must master, one way or the other. Ideally master it so much, that you lose respect for the entire scientific field. Nobody loves you as much as your close kin. Look at your father for instance, he properly is the only men smiling upon you. When you make a killing and winning at life. All else are a bit jelly, in various degrees of course. As a German of course, I like the notion of that there is no Geneva Convention in business or otherwise. Afterall, these rules were created after other powers bullied my European middle power (Germany) too much and well had to deal with the aftermath.* The closing note is the best, it brings out the human spirit of not accepting a defeat but to hold on. March through and win. Now listen to this song and go make some pushups!

Ps: Programmable Psyche dislikes struggle porn, I don't understand why, and I must find out.

*Let's forget about the Battle of Solferino, the last major battle of world history where all the armies were under the personal command of their monarchs. In A Memory of Solferino Henry Dunant was shocked at the lack of help available to soldiers. This led to the establishment of the red cross. 1864 & 1929 is also important for the Geneva Conventions. The attempt to outlaw war, or at least, trying to have more "civil" war.
